My desktop is the sign that says, “I left my home office in bed to get coffee.” At home, I work from my couch. At my dad’s we sit on couches or chairs or the floor. But in my home office, I don’t like to work on couches or chairs or floor. This is my desk. I don’t leave it for anything. I leave it to go to bed, but only for a few hours at a time. I return from work and get down to work on my problems. When it was time for me to do that, I don’t want to face the desk. I don’t want any of the things I see there. I want to sleep. Anyone who doesn’t want their desk has a problem. That anyone who made their desk and became part of it has their work. An office is a place to work.
